THEATER THE MAGIC OF MEE THREE BY MEE: IPHIGENIA AT CITY GARAGE BY TRAVIS MICHAEL HOLDER

In a 2004 interview in this publication, while appearing in the west coast premiere of Charles L. Mee's Summertime at Theatre @ Boston Court, I asked the playwright about the sprawling, messy nature of his plays and the jagged narratives inherent in his arrestingly discordant dialogue. Mee admitted he likes plays that are "not too neat, too finished, too presentable. My plays careen into each other, smash up, veer off in sickening turns. That feels good to me. It feels like life. And then I like to put this chaotic stuff into a classical form." This is what makes Mee one of the bravest, most important, and surely one of the most misunderstood playwrights of our time, as he offers random hints at pop culture while exploring the nature of human existence in all its trio blonde valleygirls (Alexandra Fulton, Nita Mickley, sweetness and abhorrence.

As is typical with the rule-breaking Mr. Mee, his adaptation of Euripides' Iphigenia, the third and last of a full season of the writer's wild spin on the Greek classics at the courageously non-PC City Garage, he intentionally places his characters in a hazy place. Without updating the details of this timeless tragedy, references skip though time and place as easily as characters in Vonnegut's Slaughterhouse Five.

Iphigenia (Crystal Clark) is still in danger of execution at the hands of her father Agamemnon (Troy Dunn) in exchange for his minions agreeing to return to the battlefield, but her bridesmaids are a deliciously inane and Alisha Nichols) who move in unison as they prattle makeovers, Lindsay Lohan, and the Chicken Dance, craftily suggesting that politics today and another horrendously unnecessary war led by another misguided leader are equally as thorny and morally reprehensible as they were in 400 BC.

City Garage's artistic director Frederique Michel is a perfect choice to interpret Mee's fascinating literary delirium, filling the stage with outlandish visual spectacles, such as a trio of legs suddenly appearing upside-down in the upstage beached boat of Charles A. Duncombe's starkly effective set design or the not-so blushing bride emerging naked under her veil to spin around the stage as a whirling dervish.

Michel's is an inspired directorial vision, made more accessible by the devoted work of most of her cast. Clark is revelatory as the title character; Marie-Francoise Theodore is heartbreaking as Clytemnestra, the mother about to lose her child to death at the hands of her own husband: Sam Littlefield is a gentle showstopper as Iphigenia's potential bridegroom; Bo Roberts chills to the bone as Menelaus offers a laundry list of wartime atrocities he's performed; and the actors playing the bimbo Barbies and Agamemnon's trusting soldiers (Ed Baccari, Maximiliano Molina, and Kenneth Rudnick) are all right with the program.

The only Achilles' heel-Greek pun hopefully excused—of this fine production is Dunn's academic watch-me-act interpretation of the war-torn Agamemnon. How it got past the director is a conundrum, but Dunn is simply all technique and no substance, moving with an angular, exaggerated, entirely phony physicality on about bridal showers they've attended at the Beverly with facial expressions and vocal trilling to match. The Wilshire. The text continuously goes from familiar playing of this rich material is an actor's dream, but it's Greek tragedy to talk of bootleg movies, one-minute also tricky territory. Mee's plays must be approached bravely and with extraordinary commitment emotionally and physically. Actors must make a meal of their roles, and, though dialogue must not be reduced to naturalism or little kitchen-sink-realism truths, they it must be fully invested and entirely honest.

> In the case of this one pivotal performance, honesty is not only missing, it's virtually nonexistent. The trap to avoid when playing Mee, in this otherwise precision interpretation of his Iphigenia or in any of his works, is to not overact or perform peculiarly to match his dialogue; on the contrary, the actor's job is to honor the eccentricities of the play and the characters while rooting it in recognizable human emotion. Ten times out of 11 in this otherwise knockout production, the writer's passionate, quirky vision is gratefully intact. 🏱

TELEVISION ONE HOT TAMALE BY FRANK BARRON

It seems that George Lopez is every- out of the bleachers to perform comedy where these days.

He's ringing in the New Year at Universal's Gibson Amphitheatre, where he'll be taking his comedy act for a string of sell-out concerts. This follows on the heels of reigning over this year's Hollywood Christmas parade as Grand two movies coming out in 2007. He Marshall, as well as cheering on his buddy Mario Lopez during the run of Dancing With the Stars. "C'mon, was there any doubt that Mario was the best?" he still argues.

Plus, ABC has put The George Lopez Show back on its primetime schedule, so he's back at work over at Warner Bros. Sandra Bullock is the executive producer of the show, but George works hard behind the scenes too, writing much of my experiences, growing up with love and struggles in a family with its dysfunctions, which isn't unique to Latinos. It is universal to all families, to all cultures. That's what makes it funny," says Lopez, who gives Bullock credit for recognizing that his stand-up act had sitcom appeal. In addition, his Showtime special George Lopez: Why You Crying? has turned into a best-selling DVD and comedy album.

At the weekly tapings of The George Lopez Show, the audience members not only receive the DVD's, CD's, T-shirts, and signed scripts as giveaways, but they also get Lopez himself...performing up close and personal. In between shooting scenes, George bounces in and bits with the enthusiastic crowd. He hugs the mamacitas, and he encourages youngsters by asking them about their goals and telling them, "There's nothing you can't do. I'm living proof of that."

If that's not enough, Lopez has just completed Balls of Fury, of which he explains, "Despite the title, it's not what you think. It's actually a sports comedy, with a lot of action focusing on wild underground ping-pong tournaments. I play an FBI agent that gets caught up in the international intrigue." Also upcoming on the big screen is The Richest Man in the World, a "Prince and the Pauper"-inspired story.

Lopez has even taken his favorite of the series' material. "It all comes out pastime (golf), and turned it into a gig, signing on to host the annual Bob Hope Chrysler Classic, January 15th through 21st. He's calling on his celebrity friends to be part of the Palm Springs pro-am golf tournament, with Ray Romano, Andy Garcia, Kurt Russell, and Huey Lewis among the guys set to putter around. "I want people there who want to have fun. It doesn't matter if they can't play well. I want to see dads and kids sharing the experience. That's why I'm doing everything I can to promote the event."

> Why is he working so hard? After getting a kidney transplant, thanks to his life-saving donor-wife Ann, George says he has more energy than he ever had before in his life, "and I want to do it all. It's all good." Þ

VIDEOGAMES

This galaxy-spanning RPG-from the folks who gave us Knights of the Old Republic and Jade Empire—sports ambitious gameplay complemented by a sci-fi yarn that could shame George Lucas' famed franchise. An enormous world, richly detailed environments, and a groundbreaking dialogue system-that erases textdriven tedium-up the immersive ante. Plus, Microsoft promises on-going content offered through Xbox Live. Beam us up!

ALONE IN THE DARK Atari, Xbox 360, PS3, PC

This classic survival horror series—originally appearing on PC's in 1992-creeps into the next generation of gaming with a fresh take on the fright-filled formula. Grisly gamers will be treated to a serialized experience not unlike television's Lost or 24, with each game level representing a single bone-chilling episode. Seat-gripping moments and cliffhanger conclusions ramp up the frights and fun. Action-focused gameplay and a spooky tale about NYC's Central Park round out the gory package.

CRACKDOWN Microsoft, Xbox 360

This futuristic actioner takes Grand Theft Auto's open-world formula and knocks it on its ass with an adrenaline-spiked next-gen experience. Players assume the role of a super-powered law enforcing badass who makes Robocop look like a shopping mall security guard. Encouraging experimentation and exploration, Crackdown grants Buena Vista Games, Xbox 360, PS3 players superhuman powers-including building-leaping abilities-and an arsenal of high-tech weaponry. You'll need all the help you can get, though, as you take down a city crawling with criminals and their well-guarded kingpins.

METROID PRIME 3: CORRUPTION Nintendo, Wii

You may have zapped more space pirates than you can shake a phazon cannon at in the past, but never with the intuitive flare provided by the Wii's motion-sensing controller. In Corruption, you strap on bounty-hunting babe Samus Aran's arm cannon, almost literally, as you control the bounty-blasting action in a way previously impossible with standard controls. From capping metroids to firing your grappling hook, you'll feel as though you're peeking from behind Samus' green visor.

THE DARKNESS 2K Games, Xbox 360, PS3

Playing as comic book-based, mob hitman Jackie Estacado, gamers are taken on a gruesome ride that stays true to Top Cow's graphic source material. Deal death in ways that other video games wish they'd thought of, as you harness the "Darkness" to cannibalize, impale, and implode your victims. You can also delegate the dirty deeds to a Darkling who'll happily carry out the creative killing for you.

TUROK

Joseph Turok returns with a Jurassicsized dinosaur-hunting adventure that could only be pulled off on next-gen hardware. This visually stunning update is supplemented with bloody battles and fast-paced raptor killing action. In addition to the expected dino-slaying, this new Turok incorporates stealth abilities, providing for sneaky throat-slitting gameplay. Of course, the real draw will be the enormous prehistoric beasties and their equally impressive, drool-dripping choppers. 🄛

BOOK

Thomas Pynchon seems to have little to no need for critics, but critics have more than a passing need for him. Pick up any review of Against the Day—Pynchon's latest panoramic tome full of miraculous inter-galactic camaraderie, full-scale international espionage, and the downfall of more than one modern civilization—and you're bound to find at least one of Pynchon's hot-button terms ("Recluse," "genius," "subversive").

Critics love the idea of this aging hippie holed up in some trillion-dollar cabin in the woods (he may be the world's greatest slippery nonconformist, but he's a rich-as-Hell slippery nonconformist), content to wait for decades at a time for the maestro to unleash another 900+ page brick of a work that no Costco-shopping skimmer would ever get more than 20 pages into.

And remember that great critic-fueled rumor a number of years ago when the Soho Weekly News purported that Pynchon and JD Salinger were actually the same person (the mind reels) and Pynchon himself actually replied in the pages of Tanner: "Not bad. Keep trying."?

However, despite the universal acclaim for Pynchon's literary prowess, Against the Day, for many critics, proves to be more of a one-night-stand rather than a doting lover/partner. Basically a western told in crunched-up multi-dialogue, Against the Day may have the gravitas and scope of Gravity's Rainbow or even Pynchon's exemplary Mason & Dixon, but at its heart, there's a naïveté and desire for relative normalcy that hasn't graced the pages of a Pynchon work since The Crying of Lot 49.

There are boys flying around in a giant balloon-ship living their lives as benevolent yet hedonistic sailors on shore leave, a conspiracy plot against a scientific discovery that could lead to the development of completely free electricity for the globe (and therefore one that must be destroyed by our world's ever-growing mercurial conglomerate beast), and more than one run-in with Groucho Marx.

As though a Davy Crockett story told to remedial third-graders by a tweaked-out Mensa candidate, Against the Day is equal parts euphoric meta-language and dumbass crotch-scratching fun.

This is the "genius" of Pynchon the "subversive" "recluse": His style doesn't just enhance the latticework of his novel's throbbing narrative, it liberates it from simplistic "he-said-this, she-said-that" novel-ism, making it seem far more of a warm acid trip than a good winter read. The way Pynchon's words collide and jumble with each other undoubtedly makes most readers throw his stuff in the nearest furnace (ah, those lucky furnaces...), but for readers with a desire to lick the tab clean, leave their clothes and belongings behind, and sit in the circle with their metaphysical brothers and sisters-both on the page and elsewhere in the reading world, having similar simultaneous Pynchon-experiences-there really is no substitute.

No, I can't synopsize this thing—I must reach for my Thesaurus to find the same ten-dollar words that Pynchon probably uses to describe his morning toast—but I will say without hyperbole (and in full-blown cliché-mode) that the aesthetic world is richer when it has more Pynchon in it.

The guy's in his seventies now, and seeing as Mason & Dixon was published and robotic ducks discuss geography with American historical figures as the universe as we know it gets nucleo-annihilated from the inside-out (try finding that in a Danielle Steel book).

Consider Against the Day a fine wine that you never thought you'd ever be able to afford, where other newly-published literature is nothing but lukewarm sugar water. Making the understatement of the year, I offer a simple sentiment to my dear Pynchon's newest masterwork: "Not bad. Keep trying."

MUSIC

PLAYING LATE ON A WORK NIGHT BY MARK JOHNSTON

Everyone at my job knows that I live a able." Here's a recount of the night in question for double life.

They all see me come in looking as though I got hit by a freight truck some time during the night. I exhibit all of the tell-tale signs of a weekend warrior musician-to put it bluntly, I'm a Rock 'n' Roll Star on my nights and weekends. Unfortunately, this always leaves me open to the myriad asinine questions: "What did you do last night?", "Did you have a gig?", and of course, "How was it?".

I wish I could respond politely, I really do...but I'm Straightedge and therefore unable to caffeinate myself, so I'm not the most pleasant person at 7am on a Tuesday morning. When a show is particularly crappy, I become more so brusque. Regrettably, Monday night's show at the Knitting Factory was one of those that caused the Mark-o-Meter to go from "Witty and Amusing" to "Curt and Objection-your consideration:

Unless you are a musician, you may not understand the sheer joy of arriving at a show, unloading your gear, and seeing that there is a line forming to enter the club in which you're about to perform. That iov quickly dissipates when you realize: The club has three rooms, you're playing in the smallest one, and you go on at 11pm. To top it off, I come to find out that the majority of the crowd teems with a bunch of 15year old punk and metal kids wearing leather jackets with Metallica, Cradle of Filth, and Crass patches sewn on, bondage pants, and Iron Maiden and AC/DC shirts. Hot Topic, eat your heart out. "Why aren't these kids at home in bed, listening to Winger?" was the question on our minds for the duration. I also cogitated that age old dichotomy of just how much kids (or their parents, in this case no doubt) are willing to shill out to make themselves appear shabby and poor.

What am I supposed to do for the next three hours before we play?". I gathered my gang-of-four, and we set off into the incandescent glow of Hollywood Blvd. Two t-shirt stores and a sex shop later, we had managed to waste all of about 11 minutes, and I had purchased some lube.

After marveling at my acquisition for an additional 15 minutes, the van rolled up. We unloaded our gear always funny rolling a 1969 Fender Showman amplifier past a gaggle of pre-teens. Unless it says Line 6 or Marshall, the neophytes have undoubtedly never heard of the equipment virtually alien to them. Or the youngsters had hopped into Mom's minivan and their parents will suddenly see a remnant of their era and think that I give a damn about their recollection of said era. I'm stuck either listening to them blab on about having watched the first Live Aid on TV, or stuck there because they were part of the production actually going into the venue and being subjected to crew, or those who were remnants of the venue's other moppets attempting to fuse black metal and pop punk on stage-Dimmu Borgir meets Panic! at the Disco.

For the majority of the night, I was able to sustain myself by taking brisk walks back and forth from the merch table to my gear backstage and outside to text my girlfriend. The merch table remained unnoticed throughout the night, my gear never moved, and the inside to see us. only people outside were some assorted smokers, a group of rockabilly wannabes practicing their shimmy shimmy shakes, and the cool indie kids who attempted how it was for me too. \triangleright

So, now I'm left with that recurring question: to be fashionably late by standing outside the door for just long enough.

In retrospect, I now regret not having stayed in my car with my laptop and headphones. I could've spent most of my night making dance music or watching Family Guy. I decided to start talking to someone so that I could avoid boredom, and after a thoroughly inane conversation about how writers should report on the accounting of events as opposed to the personal and packed it in to the back area of the venue. It's experience of them (interesting concept), it was time to set up our gear and play.

> By this time, it was approaching midnight and all sputtered toward their homes...leaving us with the few remaining people who were either there for the last band of the night (thank god it wasn't us), people two rooms who got lost on their way out.

> Off we rushed to get our gear onstage, set up in about a guarter of the time of the other bands, zoom through our life-changing 13-minute set, unload, and be gone before anyone from outside had the chance to finish his or her smoke and get

TUNES FROM CANADA, EH? BY MIKE RESTAINO

Not a double album (though having a running time equivalent to twice a normal LP), Never Hear the End of It will probably be completely ignored here in our dumbass United States. Released in Canada in September, this new disc from Sloan—hands down the best band you haven't bothered to buy a record by—was virtually ignored simply because of its bam-thwok girth.

The truth of the matter, though, is that with the exception of Bob Dylan's majestic Modern Times, Never Hear the End of It is thee album of 2006. Ambitious, biting, bizarre, and painfully catchy, this is Sloan's new high-watermark.

No American radio station will play anything here; no hipster indie record store will give in-store playtime to such pop-rock harmony. As with Talking Heads' Remain in Light—a record too white for black radio and too black for white radio (to crib from Rolling Stone)—Never Hear the End of It simply doesn't fit the air-tight niche of public radio right now. And while that's a shame, fuck 'em: They don't deserve anything this good, anyway.

The point of my story is that in order to hear Never Hear the End of It, you'll have to buy it. The boys of Sloan may never tour the western United States again—and if they do, they're usually relegated as openers to such been-there-done-that fare as Jet—but NHTEOI is just about the best thing ever. Thirty tracks—not one of them a stinker—and enough hooks to keep this one in your player for days and weeks on end.

And, c'mon—you know you love that feeling of buying something by a band no one knows much about and it turns out to be the greatest thing you've heard in years. In a perfect world, Sloan would be as big as a berry in the music biz world, but until then, it's incumbent upon us music-lovers ever-searching for the world's perfect pop song to pick this up...and then hound everyone we know until they buy it, too.

THIS WEEK IN DVD'S BY MIKE RESTAIND

DVD

Roseanne: The Complete Sixth Season (Anchor Bay) is where things start to go a bit haywire. We get the infamous "White Trash Christmas" episode—one of the series' best—but with Sarah Chalke taking over Becky duties from Lecy Goransen (a dubious casting snafu) and Roseanne's antics becoming far more think-y, Roseanne starts its slippery slide toward reflexive tomfoolery in this sixth go-round, a stretch that would eventually leave the series withering to its close two years later. Even dumber: This set has no bonus features whatsoever (I bet contributors to the series didn't have nice things to say about its new direction and chose to keep their big mouths shut).

One would think that after ten DVD box set releases, the $M^*A^*S^*H$: Season Eleven Collector's Edition DVD (Fox) would be a feature-packed affair. After all, the final episode of $M^*A^*S^*H$ was seen by no fewer than 106 million people upon its initial airing (77% of all people watching TV at the time), so it seems natural that this DVD set would have at the very least a retrospective on that Guinness World Records achievement. Alas, no. These video and audio transfers of the series are the best of the show's run on DVD (early seasons of $M^*A^*S^*H$ don't look good at all), but it's disappointing to know that the show's producers haven't given their fans some nice goodies to chew on with this final set. That being said, on the same day that Fox released this set, they released $M^*A^*S^*H$: The Martinis and Medicine Collection, that housing every episode of the series, plus a disc of bonuses only available there. After all, what better way to reward $M^*A^*S^*H$ fans than by forcing them to spend an extra $200 in order to get the complete series on DVD? Shame on you, Fox.

Your favorite DVD review writer here has had to defend his love of Queer as Folk quite a bit—and not because my masculinity is in question (I'm just as gay and just as straight as any other hoborg you meet on the street), but because that Showtime homo-fest is a downright awful show: Nothing but boys in the shower together and lesbian life-partners licking each others' vibrators. The L Word: The Complete Third Season (Paramount) adheres to much of QAF's paradigm—it's important to shoehorn as much fabulous queerness as possible into an almost pedantically simplistic narrative television format—yet even though it sways into deeply dramatic material where QAF liked to stay lean, mean, and horny (there's a gender reassignment and a devastating battle with breast cancer front and center in this season), The L Word is uniquely empathetic entertainment. And the season looks and sounds great on this four-disc set (it gets lovely 16x9 transfers and booming 5.1 mixes). So what if there's only one worthwhile bonus feature included—a featurette looking at L Word fans (and L Word parties) all across America is a fascinating appendix to this season, and proof that even though some viewers tune in solely for the masturbatory thrill of watching hotties get it on with each other, to a seasoned viewer, The L Word is capable of really getting under peoples' skin.

Boston Legal: Season Two (Fox) is ridiculous, but in all the right ways. Everything you've seen here you've seen before: Crafty attorneys with switcheroo moral fiber and libidos of hungry dragons go through the motions of their corporate law days. They win some, they lose some. There you go. But James Spader, William Shatner, and Candice Bergen almost get you to forget the humdrum of Boston Legal's banality with the glib glee they take in absolutely berating the shit out of each other. This writer has never seen a show as vitriolic and acerbic from beginning to end (there are full episodes here where Shatner is either whispering behind someone's back or screaming at the top of his lungs—there's no middle ground), and while a little goes a long way, BL ain't too shabby. This set could be better, though. Yeah, the Anamorphic 16x9 transfers here are pretty, but the Dolby Surround track doesn't impress, and the dull-as-dirt featurettes included do nothing to supplement the nastiness at the show's center. If Shatner's character sat down with this set, he'd yell his toupee off.

As with most shows that last a long while, Northern Exposure: The Complete Fifth Season (Universal) houses content that is a far cry from the series' heyday. Rob Morrow and Janine Turner's show about a prissy Manhattan doctor who gets sent to Cicely, Alaska to practice medicine has moments that most quirky hour-long dramas dream of—the show's piano-flinging episode (highlighting the ever-underestimated John Corbett's performance art musings) is one for the record books—but by this fifth go-round, things are a bit stale. Nevertheless, the show looks and sounds just fine, and there is a load of deleted scenes to mention (sure, none of them are all that solid, but better to have them included than not!). Anyone approaching Northern Exposure for the first time should start at the beginning—and not just for narrative quality's sake: The first two seasons come packaged with cute little DVD parkas (Universal stopped doing this with Season Three)—and enjoy the trip. \approx

FILM AND YOUR CHILDREN TOO

CHILDREN OF MEN

 $\star \star \star \star$

(4 out of 4 stars) Directed by Alfonso Cuarón Starring: Clive Owen, Julianne Moore, Michael Caine, Chiwetel Ejiofor, Claire-Hope Ashitey, Peter Mullan 108 minutes Rated R

Put up against the majority of the other highly hyped holiday blockbusters currently dominating movies screens, Alfonso Cuarón's Children of Men may seem on the surface to be decidedly minor by comparison. It lacks the glitz of Dreamgirls, the feel-good ethos of Rocky Balboa or The Pursuit of Happyness, the historical heft of Letters From Iwo Jima or The Good Shepard, and the mass appeal of Charlotte's Web. It features a cast that, while admittedly strong, is comprised of anything but name actors in the audience-drawing sense. To top things off, it tells a story that, when boiled down to its essentials, sounds as though a recipe for nothing but unrelieved gloom and despair.

In fact, the only chance that a film such as this has to stand out from the competition is if it turns out to be better than everything else currently playing. Not only does Children of Men achieve that goal, it is the best film of 2006—a staggering work that is simultaneously exciting and thought-provoking, and contains a couple of sequences so astounding to behold that they are assured of being ranked amongst the most memorable images ever captured on film.

Based on the novel by PD James, Children of Men quickly and efficiently transports us to a vision of 2027 Britain in which mankind as we know it is literally on its last legs. For unknown reasons, humans have been unable to reproduce since 2009, and everything has gone to hell as a result—the outside world has fallen into anarchy, illegal aliens who have snuck into the country are being rounded up into camps, and suicide pills are being advertised on the tube.

Once an activist, Theo (Clive Owen) has become just another burn-out awaiting the inevitable—not even a terrorist bombing 50 feet from where he stands or the sight of a survivor wandering away in a daze carrying her severed arm is enough to jolt him out of his state of lethargy. One day, he is plucked off the streets by members of a revolutionary group known as the Fishes and is taken to their mysterious leader, who turns out to be Julian (Julianne Moore), Theo's ex.

She has a proposition for him-she needs him to use his contacts to help her transport Kee (Claire-Hope Ashitev), a voung illegal. Theo doesn't understand what is so special about Kee until she lets him in on her little secret—she is mysteriously and miraculously pregnant. Afraid of what will happen to Kee if her condition is revealed to the authorities-it is unlikely that the vehemently anti-immigrant government will cheerfully announce that an illegal alien may hold the secret to mankind's survival—Julian vies to get the girl to representatives of the Human Project, a group of independent scientists working on a cure for the infertility plague. Without going into too much detail, I can tell you that the remainder of the film involves Theo trying to protect Kee and her precious cargo while getting them to the meeting point and rediscovering his humanity in the process.

Clive Owen (Closer, Croupier) in Children of Men.

Taken simply on a technical level, Children of Men is a breathtaking experience. Utilizing a series of long tracking shots that impart a tremendous amount of information and detail while propelling the story along. Cuarón and cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki have taken ordinary story elements and present them in such a visually dynamic and distinctive way that it feels as though we literally see them for the first time. Throughout the film, there are a number of bravura sequences-a trip into the woods that turns violent with terrifying speed and a long shot that gives us the lay of the land of one of the refugee camps-and it climaxes with an extended and seemingly seamless single-camera tour of the camp under violent siege that is simply one of the most unforgettable bits of visual storvtelling that I have ever seen.

What makes these scenes so astonishing is not merely that they are unfathomably complex technical achievements (if you look hard enough, you can see where a couple of cuts were most likely made), but because we are too engrossed in the story to even realize how complicated such scenes must have been to put together. Sound also plays an important part in the proceedings as well-that aforementioned siege is brought to its shattering crescendo with one simple noise that forces everyone involved to reevaluate everything in an instant. And while most of the trickery is deployed in the service of the story, Cuarón also realizes the importance of tossing in something lighter in order to keep things from getting too dyspeptic-while I don't want to give away the details, I can say that fans of Pink Floyd will delight in one particular throwaway gag.

Clive Owen has in the past shown himself to be quite effective in icy antihero roles such as those for Croupier and Sin City, but has been less effective in the more conventionally heroic parts he has tackled in the likes of King Arthur and Derailed. Here, he is on-screen for virtually every scene, and the result is a great performance in which he quietly and powerfully transforms Theo from the coldest of cold fish into a man determined to once again do something good for a world that may be beyond such things.

In his previous effort, Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Alfonso Cuarón (who also wowed audiences with his Y tu mamá también) gave us the first entry in that effects-heavy series that felt sincerely inhabited by flesh-and-blood people instead of two-dimensional characters; and that gift for allowing the human touch to break through the technique continues here with even stronger results.

A CHILDREN'S STORY FOR ADULTS

PAN'S LABYRINTH ****

(3 and 1/2 out of 4 stars) DIRECTED BY GUILLERMO DEL TORO STARRING: ARIADNA GIL, IVANA BAQUERO, DOUG JONES, MANOLO SOLO, LINA MIRA 95 MINUTES, RATED R

Pan's Labyrinth is a children's story that poses very adult questions against the traditionally dark and malevolent backdrop of a gothic fairy tale. Filmmaker Guillermo del Toro, in his sixth effort, keeps who is a leader of the rebel movement. Ariadna with his flair for dynamic visuals coupled with strong Gil plays against part, as Carmen. She gives the characters who face moral dilemmas.

little girl with an obsession for fairytales, the film opens on a rural road along the countryside. The year is 1944, the place, Spain in midst of a Civil War, a familiar topic explored in another Guillermo film. The Devil's Backbone.

Ofelia is with her pregnant mother, Carmen, traveling to a mill that has been converted into a military outpost by her soon-to-be stepfather Captain Vidal. At a brief roadside stop, Ofelia encounters in recent years have emerged at the forefront of a large dragonfly that leads her into the forest and today's cinema. They are consistently willing to promises of magic to come.

motifs, Guillermo del Toro crafts a child's fantasy alongside real human tragedy. The monsters that the del Toro team, the man has deftly created a exist between the dusty pages of gothic tales very concise masterpiece, contained within tight pale in comparison to the evil men are capable of, especially during times of war. The Franco regime was particularly monstrous-their killings were committed without hesitation or thought, and, unlike monsters, they were very real.

Del Toro has assembled a brilliant cast for this film, beginning with the youngest and perhaps most inspired of the lot, Spanish actress Ivana Baquero. She channels both the naïve optimism and hardened world-weariness of Ofelia with such strength and grace that I would not object to any award that may be bestowed upon her for this performance. The Spanish veterans are equally powerful. Maribel Verdu shines as a spy working for her brother role a tremendous amount of sensitivity and grace, despite the brutality of the situations in which she Told through the eyes of Ofelia, an imaginative finds herself. Sergi Lopez, a kind and genteel man in person, invokes such pure, cold evil; it feels very little like acting.

> A clean, efficient script, effortless performances, and one of the finest examples of stellar cinematography I've seen this year combine to make Pan's Labyrinth a memorable experience.

The collaborators del Toro has worked with work both within and outside the studio system, and have proven to be in high demand amongst Borrowing from various classic fairytale actors, producers, and studio chiefs. Not to disappoint the vast hoardes interested in working with craftsmanship...and all this in between Hellboy projects. 🖻

"I DIDN'T GO AND JUST [SAY], 'OKAY, NOW I'M DOING A BIG, BEST-SELLING NOVEL' AS IF THAT WAS AN EASY THING TO DO, RIGHT? IT WAS THE MOST COMPLICATED FILM I'VE EVER DONE."

FILM WORTH EVERY SCENT BY MICHAEL GUILLÉN INTERVIEW WITH TOM TYKWER

Tom Tykwer established an international fan base with his highly original and innovative 1998 hit Run, Lola, Run and followed that success with the AN equally entertaining The Princess and the Warrior (2000). Though he's made a few films since then, including his contribution to Paris, je t'aime (2006) and Heaven (2002) born of a Krzysztof Kieslowski screenplay, none has been as highly anticipated as his most recent venture Perfume: The Story Of A Murderer based on German author Patrick Süskind's 1985 global bestseller and the most expensive German film to date.

We met for a one-on-one at the Ritz Carlton, and after determining that he knew what I meant by the term "synesthesia" (when senses cross so that, for example, you might "hear" colors), Tykwer accepted my compliment that Perfume is the most synesthesiatic cinematic experience I've ever had, despite mixed reviews that indicate Tykwer did not achieve the sense of scent through a visual medium.

Tom Tykwer: They didn't really understand it. In Germany—if you pick up on something quite exceptionally big, a novel that is so much a myth in Europe and particularly in Germany, and then you join forces with a notorious producer who is connected to commercial hits, suddenly people turn a bit against you. It's interesting because I totally didn't expect this ever to happen to me. [Chuckles.] I felt that people were not watching the movie but they were trying to judge a phenomenon. They had so many prejudices inside that they couldn't just let go and watch the movie the way it was. At the same time, it's fine if you see what you see, y'know? I'm completely happy to read any kind of perspective as long as I feel it's taken the effort serious that's been made to put this on screen. I didn't go and just [say], "Okay, now I'm doing a big, best-selling novel" as if that was an easy thing to do, right? It was the most complicated film I've ever done. I was trying to be really faithful and at the same time subjective and individual with my approach. For some of those perceptions, there was no way of winning. There was no way of achieving, no way of having success in it.

Michael Guillén: Technically, Perfume is stunning to look at—the whole production design, the musical score that you collaborated on or, basically, composed—I thought it was extremely accomplished.

TT: The funny thing is that I feel like, in America, the response I'm getting so far is so much not influenced of course by any predisposition, because the novel is not like a myth here; it's just known. In Europe, it has this kind of Lord of the Rings status. MG: Earlier, you were saying that here was a character who had no scent and—I haven't read the book, but my understanding is from talking to people who have—that he was horribly disfigured and ugly, and, to that extent, was ignored and rendered invisible; no one took notice of him.

TT: Which for me is very contradictory.

MG: In your film, however, you took a different tack. You made him more of a tortured soul than physically disfigured, and he's alarmingly

TT: His concept of identity is limited. He doesn't have social skills. He romanticized. hasn't been educated at all in terms of how to analyze identity beyond his own self-invented system of smells. He's an obsessive collector of something, which we all know a little bit about—the whole thing that can happen to us when we start collecting things and we get really obsessive about it and it becomes its own world. A universe inside our world and a universe we escape to because we feel safe in there because we set the rules there and it frees us from the cares that we on a daily basis have to live in. His disposition to smell is in a way, of course, pathological or-let's say-fanatical, because his belief system says, "I am what I smell like. My smell is my identity." Which is not really so far-fetched as it immediately seems because, in a strange way, secretly on a certain level I think we all agree.

MG: We all have a pheromonal signature.

TT: Exactly. In the pheromones is actually...the way we meet each other, we identify those pheromones immediately and we analyze them already and we can analyze basic genetic structures of the being that we encounter and already make decisions in terms of sympathy or antipathy or mating business or no mating business [chuckles], and all that stuff is being done based on olfactory "first glance" experiences. Modern science says it's faster than the visual reaction. Of course it's faster, because sometimes we smell somebody before we actually have seen the person. But that whole system is still something in discovery. Anyway, as I was saying yesterday, there's this saying in German—ich kann Dich nicht riechen—"I can't smell you," or "I don't like smelling you," which means "I don't like you." Sympathy and smell and acceptance and smell and all these things have a strong and a close relation to each other in our own idea. This whole idea of saying identity and smell is deeply connected makes total sense. He is, of course, obsessive about this idea, but it's not so far-fetched.

MG: Perfume is a film that has been in development hell, due to the hesitancy of the author, for a very long time. At one point, Stanley Kubrick was attached to the project— TT: That's all myth. He read it once and didn't really want to do it.

MG: Oh? So Kubrick, Ridley Scott, Tim Burton, of all these directors allegedly attached to the project, none had developed previous scripts?

TT: That I know of, none of them developed scripts.

MG: So that's my true question: you never read any previous drafts that you subsequently developed? The current script is your own writing?

TT: Yes. But, when I entered [the project], there was one first draft that Andrew Birkin [writer of The Name of the Rose] had written in collaboration with Bernd Eichinger, and I stayed of course with this writing team. So I joined the writing team that already was there, and we went on for something like two years and through probably something like 20 other drafts to then find the final script; but, I think some of the structural basics of that first draft when I first entered was very fruitful and important for what ultimately became the movie. So this is how it was.

MG: One final trivia question. I mentioned the synesthesia as a caveat to say that you don't need a scratch-and-sniff card to appreciate this movie.

TT: [Laughs.] I would really be disappointed if people were missing the cards, because I always thought this whole idea of making something really smell would be the capitulation of my art.

MG: Yes, it bastardizes imagination.

TT: Yeah, exactly; I mean, that's the idea of it. The book didn't smell, and it was all up to the language of literature. So now it's cinematic language that has to convince. 🄛

Arthur and the Invisibles Not Yet Reviewed (Not Rated)

What the hell happened to Luc Besson? High school aiddiness aside, this is the guy who made Léon (The Professional), The Fifth Element (in my book still the finest use of sci-fi graphics and makeup in the history of film), La Femme Nikita, and the visually stunning if somewhat sluggish The Big Blue. And yet...The Messenger comes along, and we're all taken aback. What was that all about? (And with such a cool teaser trailer as we all remember!) And it was pretty much downhill from there with Wasabi and The Transporter and god-knows-what-else. Then, out of nowhere, here he is, coming back with an animated film (with some live action) of all things? A children's film (sort of), with: Madonna, David Bowie, Mia Farrow (1), Jason Bateman, Snoop Dogg (!), Robert De Niro, Emilio Estevez, Harvey Keitel, Anthony Anderson, Jimmy Fallon, Chazz Palminteri, and even the little kid from Tim Burton's abominable Willy Wonka remake. Apocalypto, Mel Gibson's highly-anticipated directorial follow-up to The Passion of the Christ, feels like a project that was initiated by Terrence Malick and hijacked halfway through by Eli Roth. There are scenes of extraordinary visual beauty that capture the rhythms and feel of a culture alien to us in such an effortless manner that it feels as though we have actually been plunged into the jungles of pre-Colombian Central America and are observing the natives' activities first-hand. Director Zhang Yimou (Hero, House of Flving Daggers) takes us to the 10th century during the Later Tang Dynasty and into the walls of the Forbidden City, a palace geographically lodged in the heart of Beijing but a world spiritually far away from the reality of war-torn China. Here, the golden clad Emperor and Empress (Chow Yun-Fat and Gong Li) keep up their perfect charade for the entire country to see, but on the inside, their repressed hatred for one another is bound to explode, and so it does...as bloodshed ensues on the eve of the Chrysanthemum festival. Not since Akira Kurosawa's Ran have I been so enthralled by the intrigues of a royal family from East Asia. This year's official Oscar submission from China is definitely worth a visit to the cinema. Curse of the Golden Flower unfolds as a great Shakespearian tragedy: filial piety, incest, and deceit-all solid ingredients for a melodrama of epic proportions. (CR)

The Dead Girl $\star \star 1/2$ (R)

Karen Moncrieff's Blue Car is one of the more overlooked—directorial impressive—and debuts of the past few years. Her latest effort. The Dead Girl. is an ambitious piece of formalist filmmaking that weaves together a group of disparate characters around a nonlinear storvline about a voung woman's (Brittany Murphy) unsolved murder. Featuring an accomplished cast that includes Toni Collette (playing a very strange character). Mary Beth Hurt, Mary Steenburgen, Marcia Gay Harden, and the aforementioned Murphy as a handful of wounded, loosely connected souls. The Dead Girl is cold and methodical, but the fractured narrative doesn't seem the best way to tell this tale. Moncrieff is certainly a sophisticated filmmaker, but her choices blunt much of the story's inherent tension. Still, The Dead Girl has its moments, one of them being a fantastic performance by relative newcomer Rose Byrne, (WC)

★ ★ 1/2 (PG-13)

The good news about Dreamairls, the longawaited big-screen version of the enormously popular 1981 Broadway musical, is that it isn't as conceptually suspect as the overrated Chicago, it isn't as cinematically clunky as The Producers, and it certainly isn't as much of an affront to the senses as the disastrous adaptations of Rent and The Phantom of the Opera. The had news is that while it may be a better movie musical than those recent efforts, it still isn't much of a movie in its own right. (PS)

Anyway, so, yes: here's the film about Edie, Andy's favorite girl. Read his Philosophy of Andy Warhol some time...he calls her Taxi, but it's Edie. The one girl he seemed even moderately interested in not just being but actually schtooping. Yup. Maybe the fact the screenplay was co-written by a guy name Captain Mauzner has something to do with its being under the radar (or maybe the fact that his only other screenplay was for that Boogie Nights rip-off vawnfest Wonderland). It will be interesting to see how The Good German will fare with contemporary audienceswill they embrace it as a well-acted and welltold story, or will they be put off by its attempts to revive an era that was over and done long before the majority of today's ticket-buying audience was even born. Personally, I think that even if Soderbergh hadn't decided to recreate the apparatus of 1940's-era studio productions, the film would still hold up because it is deer and Moulin Rouge. The Good Shepherd $\star \star \star (R)$

Even though it marks only his second time in the director's chair. Robert De Niro's The Good Shepherd is the kind of impossibly ambitious epic that even the most skilled of veterans would never even attempt to undertake. Not only does it tackle an amazingly complex subiect-a look at the formative years of the CIA will parallel both the agency's early noble ambitions and its eventual descent into power-hunory corruption and paranoia-but it wants to do so in a way that will transform what could have been pulp-thriller elements into an elegiac epic along the lines of The Godfather. Perhaps inevitably, it doesn't quite come off as well as one might have hoped—it is too long, too dour, and too diffuse for its own good-but it does contain a lot of fascinating individual elements, and while De Niro isn't quite able to pull them together into a completely satisfying whole, he at least deploys them in a compellingly watchable manner that allows you to overlook the fact that it doesn't quite work until long after the end credits have finished rolling. Happy Feet ★ ★ ★ 1/2 (PG)

Though I don't recall hearing mention of it during all that sub-Hallmark hopey that Morgan Freeman was spewing throughout March of the Penquins, it seems that each penquin has his very own "heart song" that he sings in order to express who he is and to attract a mate. In theory, that may be wonderful, but what if you are a penguin that simply cannot sing and whose manner of personal expression appears to be tap-dancing? Will you be doomed to be ostracized forever from your flock, family, and the cute penguin you've been crushing on, or will your unique abilities somehow allow you to save the flock, reconcile with the family, and finally hook up with the cutie? These are some of the penetrating question at the heart of Happy Feet, a decidedly odd and not-entirely-unendearing animated film that plays like a peculiar mash-up of Rudolph the Red-Nosed Rein-

Chris Noonan (Babe) directs this fantastical biopic of renowned children's story writer Beatrix Potter whose Peter Rabbit books and other timeless favorites continue to delight the world decades later. Unfortunately, Renee Zellweger stars as Beatrix herself (which does make some sense, as she resembles a rabbit). Fortunately, Emily Watson plays the sister of Potter's husband-to-be played by Ewan McGregor (let's really hope he's back in form again; we miss you Ewan! Come back to the fold!). Surely, there will be a lot of adorable and awkward British bumbling afoot between the romantic development between McGregor and Zellweger, but hopefully they're able to pull it together in a tale that gives us the real-life story of Potter...with a surrealist twist in that we can actually see (animated on screen) the fantasy world Potter herself sees in constructing the universe of Peter and his friends. The Nativity Story Not Yet Reviewed (PG)

OK. I won't get too pissed-off here. OK. I'm calm, it's cool. No worries. A deep breath, and...all right. So, here's the low-down on this piece of shit (yes, I called it this without having seen it vet: that's right, I said it): Catherine Hardwicke (yes, the director of those double piles of steaming treacle Thirteen and Lords of Doctown) has decided to take the blue streaks out of her hair and get extra-bubbly about (insert annoving southern belle accent here) "a voung fourteen-year-old girl dealing with being impregnated by God in this story of the birth of Christ." Jesus! Mary is played by that little boy-girl from the equally execrable Whale Rider, Keisha Castle-Hughes, who-though only 16-is already friggin' pregnant with her 19-year-old boyfriend's baby! Maybe she'll make up a story of her own... (don't worry, I won't go there). Finally, who should have written this colossal affront to Christendom, but Mike Rich who penned: Finding Forrester, The Rookie (the one with Dennis Quaid, not Clint Eastwood), and the damningly invidious Radio in which Cuba decides to slap his face a few times and don Billy-Bob teeth in an effort to portray a real-life retard. My goodness, and I'm not even Christian, for chrissakes!! This is the first film ever to have premiered at the Vatican. (MK)

Ben Stiller stars in this rollicking comedic adventure film for the whole family. Based on the book by Milan Trenc, film is directed by The Secret World of Alex Mack helmer Shawn Levy. and gives us the story of Stiller as a bumbling security quard at a prestigious museum whose artifacts come to life after the reliquary shuts down for the night. The Painted Veil ★ ★ ★ (PG-13)

The characterizations here are as rich as the photography of the environment, beautifully filmed on location in China. Through more than just presence alone, talented actors Naomi Watts and Edward Norton breathe life into a somewhat stagnant story that would otherwise crawl. The pace of the film is incremental, carefully focusing on the two main characters that have isolated themselves both emotionally and geographically in a far off land. Their frustrations and simple joys translate well to the viewer. But the overall effect is somewhat flat. The Painted Veil never quite makes us care enough about its protagonists. Perhaps, this is because its protagonists always remain staid and treat one another with a civil reserve that would be appropriate in the 1920's, but seems foreign today. Maybe it's time to stop trying to perfect the work of Maugham. (JH)

The Pursuit of Happyness

Not Yet Reviewed (PG-13) Will Smith stars in this film based on the true story of Chris Gardner, a man who spent a large nortion of his life on the street with his young son before struggling his way through the trenches of the Stock Market to become a true testament to the American Dream. (MK)

The Queen

★ ★ ★ 1/2 (PG-13)

Ably directed by Stephen Frears (High Fidelity, The Grifters) and written by Peter Morgan (The Last King of Scotland), The Queen gives us Helen Mirren as Queen Elizabeth II in a role that one would think was penned specifically to grant the beloved actress a definite Oscar...if it weren't based a person who already actually exists. The crux of the film takes place during the week after the tragic death of (ex) Princess Diana, a time in which progressive and modern English prime minister Tony Blair is already butting heads with the conservative and stogy Royals who rarely leave their palatial estate to see just what changes have occurred during the turbulent 1990's. (JH)

Rocky Balboa 1/2 (PG)

Many are saving that, if nothing else, Rocky Balboa is, at bottom, a fitting conclusion to the series. I defy this and assert that the "fitting conclusion" occurred at the end of Rocky the First. That is how this story ends-the true underdog tale, the modern-day fable of an Average Joe with a little something extra-special keeping his flames burning to stay the full 15 rounds...and lose. All the rest after that is merely a half-baked hodgepodge of Sylvester Stallone's self-aggrandizing hallucinations. There's talk around the campfire that the impetus for Slv to waste our time with Bocky Balboa and the upcoming Rambo IV: Pearl of the Cobra stems from his wanting to at long last produce his baby, his Edgar Allen Poe biopic. If true, this is an iniquitous shame. As with the character of Rocky himself. Stallone needs to realize it is over, and it's been over for some time now. This disjointed string of forced performances, rampant narcissism on the part of Slv, and hackneyed cliches in perpetua is trite where it's supposed to be inspiring and ultimately dull where it should be fun. Far worse than you could ever imagine, Rocky Balboa is not worth today's exorbitant ticket prices even for a gag or a giggle at campy nostalgia or cheesy kitsch. (MK)

Stranger Than Fiction ★ ★ ★ 1/2 (PG-13)

Stranger Than Fiction, filmmaker Marc Forster's latest venture, features an eclectic story with an even more eclectic cast. Where else can you see Will Ferrell romance Maggie Gyllenhaal while getting advice from Dustin Hoffman who admires Emma Thompson who's being babysat by none other than Queen Latifah? Well, the actors play characters who do accomplish these things in Fiction, a film that is bound to make America's over-caffeinated movie-goers feel awfully good this Holiday season. (JH)

Peter O'Toole stars in this charming romantic dramedy as a veteran actor whose only thrills in life include playing cards with his equally senescent friends as they read the obituaries and

This perfect poetic-realist masterthee Renoir, painter Pierre Auguste) who performs as a catalystic character in the film he directs. Story gives us a bevy of characters who holiday on retreat to a mansion, and there ignites the multiple love triangles that bring together the film's class satire as comedy of the highest order. All lovers end up winning and losing equally, to the whims of fate.

Renoir takes on film as though it were a modern piece of art, having once said that his vision of cinema is that in which the director should aspire to the same form of expression as a writer to his book or, indeed, a painter to his painting. As proof of his thesis in Rules, the performance of the Danse Macabre in the mansion is reflexive of the director's own goal to reveal the decadence of the French Bourgeoisie, in essence indicting them for the downfall of modern culture

The splendor of the film is in its being as comic as dramatic, varying between genres as fast as a fatal gunshot. On an aesthetic level, Rules privileges long takes and montages in a formalized systemic artwork that works on sociological levels (for our cerebral titillation), while all the time electrifying the viewer's senses on a visceral level.

Hill's Roger Michell, story takes a twist when O'Toole runs afoul of one of a cherubic young niece of one of his friends and an odd sort of friendship develops between the two. O'Toole is at his very best here, and all but makes the movie. This is certainly the stuff of Oscar potential. (JH)

We are Marshall $\star \star 1/2$ (PG)

Story follows the tragic events of and after the Marshall University football team's plane aftermath, the university and town in which shock and despair that the decision is made touchdown. (JH) \vdash

Though it is now hailed as a triwork is conducted by Jean Renoir (son of umphant classic in league with the finest artifacts cinema has to offer in her 110-year history, Rules was originally so universally maligned that one audience member attempted to burn down a theater in which the film was presented. The French government then banned the film a month after its initial release (for being a morale killer in the wake of a new war), and when the Nazis occupied France a year later, they took to having most of the film prints burned. As though this were not enough, the original negatives of the film were thought lost after having been "accidentally" bombed by Allied planes (true story!).

> In 1959, Jean Renoir was able to put together a new cut of the film with pieces of celluloid he found in various places; the result being an assembly that satisfied the late director enough (less one minor scene) that the version we can see today remains of his highest personal expression: a film that has truly stood the test of time, and that will continue to profoundly influence filmmakers and artists alike for generations to come.

> The Rules of the Game will be presented in a new, digitally restored presentation at the Landmark Nuart Theatre from Dec. 29th to Jan. 4th.

not to continue the football program in the following year. However, one of the team's players not on the plane (Anthony Mackie) rallies the students and the school president (David Strathairn) to come together, chant "We are Marshall" together in the guad so loudly that the football cancellation decision is in fact overturned. The real problem with the film lies in the fact that the filmmakers attempt too much here, in showing all the events with such meticulous detail of the plane crash and the immediate aftermath, then going further crash lands with no survivors in 1970. Oscar-nominated producer/animator Joseph Barbera died of natural causes at age 95.

Mr. Barbera was the creative partner of the late William Hanna. The Hanna-Barbera company was responsible for such classic cartoons as: Tom and Jerry, The Yogi Bear Show, The Flintstones, Scooby-Doo, The Jetsons, Johnny Quest, The Smurfs, and a host of other enduring favorites.

With William Hanna, Mr. Barbera shared two Best Short Subject Animated Oscar nominations for "One Droopy Knight" (a cartoon featuring Droopy the Dog with his inimitable low, lackadaisical voice) and "Good Will to Men." Joseph Barbera also received eight Emmy awards, including one for his executive producing the live action TV movie The Gathering starring Ed Asner, directed by Randal Kleiser (Flight of the Navigator, Big Top Pee-wee, The Blue Lagoon, Grease) and written by James Poe (They Shoot Horses, Don't They?, Toys in the Attic, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof).

DIED DEC: 19-200

Joseph Barbera began his career as a magazine cartoonist. He joined MGM in 1936, and after teaming up with William Hanna, the boys created their first cartoon together: the first short that would kick-start the series of Tom and Jerry. Their first short earned the first of 14 Oscar nominations the series would receive over its run (over the years, winning the studio seven statues). In 1955, the team was put in charge of MGM's animation department, and, two years later, MGM closed down the division, with the pair going into business for themselves.

Mr. Barbera directed over 200 animated shorts and films during his long career. There is not a baby boomer alive whose life was not touched by Hanna-Barbera cartoons. Fortunately, the cartoons they enjoyed growing up still bring laughter and joy to each generation thereafter. The rest is animated history.

MTV NETWORK IS LOOKING FOR HOT GIRLS -- PAYS $300 THE PERFECT 10

MTV Networks is launching the funniest, sexiest, most disgusting internet trivia game of all time.

It's ten incredibly difficult questions on a subject dudes should know a lot about -- beer. Pam Anderson, video games, etc. -- presented by a super-hot bikini-clad babe.

Get the question right and she rewards you with some titillating fun, like bouncing on a trampoline, uncorking a wine bottle, or licking a lollipop. Get the answer wrong and endure the wrath of our 400 lb gorilla, who berates guys for their stupidity.

NO NUDITY required, but must be comfortable in a bikini.

Must be fun, sexy, strong enough to dish it out, and have the ability to drive men totally crazy.

The job pays $300.00 for a half day's work.

If this sounds like you or someone you know, please send a couple of photos (headshot and full length), a short bio, and your contact info to: casting@eveboogie.com

Once we receive your photos, we'll contact you to set up an interview.

ARIES (March 20 to April 20)

It's all about money for you Friday and Saturday, with some impulsive spending likely. New Year's Eve into New Year's Day rocks with excitement and luck in love that may bring change, especially if you are paired to or meet Aquarius, Leo, Cap, Scorpio, or Sag. Hard work on Wednesday should give way to better cooperation on Thursday.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 21)

Boredom motivates you Thursday. A busy Friday may be well worth it all. Over the weekend, there is some rather heavy spending likely, especially in "it takes money to make money" situations. A talkative Monday and Tuesday are indicated for a variety of reasons, making sense why you want to withdraw near the full moon Wednesday.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21)

A sound decision Friday may line your pockets. Power/money people need to be schmoozed over the weekend. Party hardy Monday for fun, but pack as much into Tuesday to Wednesday as you can, since your stars show that a "clean plate" will be needed very soon.

CANCER (June 21 to July 23)

Friday appears filled with likable and cooperative souls who'll do anything. The weekend shows challenges, should money discussions dominate...especially with Pisces, Leo, Cap, Aquarius, or Scorpio. Get as much done before Wednesday when we have the full moon for two days.

LEO (July 23 to Aug 23)

Anxious energies claim Thursday. Hot love-luck Friday may inspire you to overbook your time—find balance. The weekend appears enjoyable. A long look at yourself Monday will shed some much needed light on new changes. Creative energies Tuesday will make tasks easy for you after Wednesday's full moon busy time. So, get a grip!

VIRGO (Aug 23 to Sept 23)

Massive support from mentors and power people on Thursday may make for milestone situations. Bid deals and big loads litter your days from Friday to Wednesday. Money dominates the weekend, while communications claim the early part of the week.

LIBRA (Sept 23 to Oct 23)

Scrambling out from under a load Friday to Monday may drain your energy by Tuesday, but you'll make it. It appears that you will be assessing personal situations on Saturday. Talk it out over Tuesday to Wednesday, especially if Leo, Cancer, Cap, Aquarius, or Taurus is involved.

SCORPIO (Oct 23 to Nov 22)

Fatigue and irritation—especially over need, money, children, in-laws, Taurus, Cancer, Leo, or Aquarius—is likely until the Monday. Energies switch fast with the New Year. Tuesday cooperation is back up, but emotional issues may cloud Wednesday.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22 to Dec 22)

Cooperation is good Friday into Saturday, but swift changes on Sunday may bring questions, discussions, and even controversy to the surface. A lot of fast-talking Monday to Wednesday may be required to prevent or fix problems for Thursday.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22 to Jan 20)

Heavy investments of time, money, effort, energy, and patience go into Friday to Sunday with low rates of cooperation in return. Your romantic scruples may be tested as well. Greater ease by Tuesday brings good news. Wednesday may hold fatigue and illness...unless you prepare.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20 to Feb 18)

Rich, reliable support may just make your Thursday. You may feel gullible and vulnerable over the weekend, and you may thus try to throw money at issues to fix them—this may be all you can do! Fatigue and overwork requires rest Monday and Tuesday. Old loves can surface Wednesday.

Pisces (Feb 18 to March 20)

Your ESP will be high and reliable over the weekend, except Saturday when you are vulnerable to unwise money spending. A great idea early in the week may launch you into some new big business by as soon as Thursday or as far out as February 2007.
